The Two Birth Announcements in Hawaii Papers in August 1961 Regarding Obama's Alleged Birth in Hawaii Have Absolutely No Independent Probative Value or Proof Value

The birth announcement placed in the local community newspapers provides no independent probative value. They were automatically inserted in those papers by the birth registration office in the local papers based on the same false information provided by the mother and/or maternal grandmother, when falsely registering Obama's birth information as happening in Hawaii. In addition, investigators checking residency records and talking to a neighbor at the address given indicate no record of the Obama family having ever lived at the address given in the announcements:

How to register a birth in Hawaii in 1961 using a simple mail in form. No witnesses to birth were required. This registration of the birth then triggers the newspaper announcement of the birth registration in the next weeks list of births registered. Obama's birth may be registered in Hawaii and the newspaper advertisements were triggered by that via the Department of Health policy back then, which routinely provided birth registration lists each week to the newspaper, but that does not prove that Obama was physically born in Hawaii. Given the contradictory statements by other family members of Obama as to where he was born, other physical and independent contemporaneous evidence will be needed to actually prove Obama was physically born in Hawaii, such as hospital records and the name of delivering doctor, and not simply the he had his birth falsely birth registered there by the grandmother or mother using the "birth occurred at home" mail order method with no independent witnesses.
